PRESCOTT'S UNWORKED MINE.

(Communicated.)
The beautiful situation of Prescott must delight the heart of every new comer, if he have a particle of the artist nature in his composition, and he will not be long in this busy, energetic town before he will be made aware of the mineral wealth lying hidden in the neighboring mountain air. He will soon be convinced that the evidences of prosperity which greet him at every turn are based upon lasting foundations, and that the future of the place is secured. However, there is one mine far surpassing all the others in richness, the resources of which are absolutely unfailing, that is completely neglected. It is the unsurpassed climate of the place. Here nature is enjoyed at all seasons of the year, in a vast number of specific forms, the dread disease of consumption and its train of gloomy satellites. Myriads of sufferers could find here, amidst the most lovely surroundings, the antidote for the tuberculous poison that is so surely and mercilessly destroying their life, and making the short term of it permitted them, a miserable existence. In the pure, dry air, even annual temperature, and health bestowing exhalations of her encompassing pine forests, Prescott has a laboratory in her immediate vicinity, where a physician far greater than Koch is at work, producing remedies that are entering in their effects upon those who need them, and entirely innocuous to all others. There appears notwithstanding to a stranger like myself, one serious impediment in the way of those who might otherwise be induced to seek a home in this exquisite place, and aid in building up and beautifying its charming hillsides. It is the object of this communication to call attention to this, and point out the necessity of its removal. Almost the first question asked by an invalid, when seeking a place where relief from his ailments may be secured, is, what kind of water may he have? Pure water and plenty of it is an absolute necessity to him. It is to be furnished from reservoirs, the contents of which have been proven by chemical analysis to be free from deleterious constituents, he has found one condition that must greatly influence him in the choice of a permanent locality. Uncertain as this point cannot be permitted. For this reason he is deterred from drawing a supply of water out of wells; and for drinking purposes the people of Prescott are entirely dependent upon these. The reservoir supply is unfit for use except for washing, irrigating, etc., etc. There is no need of this state of things. An abundance of pure water fills the streams to the south of the town, and it could be stored in the existing and other reservoirs at a very trifling expense. All that is required to convey and store it is to take advantage of what nature has done, and provide pipes through which it may be conducted by the simple force of gravity, increasing, if necessary, the capacity of the storage place or places. Let this be done, and let the climatic advantages of the town be made known by generous and judicious advertising, and but a short time will elapse before real estate will become a mine of priceless value. Lovely homes will soon be located on every available space within the present town limits, and these latter will rapidly extend in every direction. But this water question must be attended to without delay, and the writer of this, a stranger, hopes he may rouse some of the quick witted, enterprising people that form so large a proportion of your population, to an appreciation of its pressing character, and set them to work to provide a speedy and efficient remedy. They will not only show themselves to be public benefactors by so doing, but will open up a lead that will prove to them and their fellow townsmen a source of permanent wealth and prosperity.

PERCUTING.
Henry Watterson of the Louisville Courier-Journal takes a somewhat different view of the situation in the south from some more radical editors there. Referring to the comments of the Charleston News and Courier on the defeat of Wade Hampton the above paper says: "There runs through all this a false note: a note of reproach as well as of regret. Truly it is well for the people of South Carolina that the war is over. Through it and the years which followed it, that state has suffered greatly and sorrowed greatly. Its fields were devastated, its treasures were wasted, and its young manhood was sacrificed to a cause lost long ago. It is a quarter of a century since Appomattox and fortunately this young senator was not old enough to have been a rebel." It is high time that the spirit of the men of the south should be freed from the slavish bondage of the past. There was much in that history that was beautiful, the fires of self sacrifice lighted that path to defeat, and it was a struggle that left its mark on the very souls of men. But there was much that was mistaken, much that we may regret in bitterness of heart. Instead let us thank God the war is over; thank God that slavery and disunion are dreams only, and now never to be realized. The old battle-flag had a glory of its own; it was baptised in blood that should never have been shed. Fold it away with other mementoes of the dead past, and turn instead to the flag of the union, the stars and stripes, 'the free tree's only hope.'"

Some of the territorial newspapers are agitating the question of limiting railroad passenger fares to a maximum of five cents per mile.

A bill has been introduced by Speaker Burnes compelling the railroads in New Mexico to reduce passenger fares for first class travel to four cents per mile.

A crowd of skaters in Paris, tried to cross the Seine recently, but when near the middle of the river, the ice gave way and nine of the party were drowned.

The Phoenix Herald announces that among the legislators gathering at Phoenix are several aspirants for United States senator on Arizona becoming a state.

The Indian war seems to be over. The Indians are surrendering, but show a wonderful scarcity of arms from the number they are turning over to the military.

Butte City, Montana, is to-day probably the most thriving and wealthy city of its size in the United States. The Anaconda copper mine alone yielded $15,940,000 last year.

The court of appeals has granted a new trial to ex-Sheriff Flack, of New York, and William Flack, convicted of conspiracy to secure a divorce for the former.

Bills for carving several new counties in southern California have been introduced into the legislature of that state. Every second hand boom town in the country wants to be a county seat.

Mrs. Freeman quarreled with one Fulkerson at Tusculum, Mo., Tuesday and fired a shot into his breast. Fulkerson snatched the gun from the woman and, before he expired, mortally wounded her.

The Charleston News and Courier gave vent to the following bitter lament over the defeat of that arch traitor Wade Hampton: "The war is over in South Carolina. Wade Hampton has been discharged from the service of the state to make room for a man who was too young to be a rebel." Take the old gray cloak out of the closet and look at it for the last time before it is thrown into the rag-bag—it represents something and meant something twenty years ago. Throw the old battered canteen into the ash barrel—it meant some thing twenty years ago. Unfold the old, tattered battle flag under whose glorious folds you, perchance, followed Hampton into the very jaws of death—look at it for the last time and let the flames consume it. All those things are but dust and ashes. The agony is over. There are no longer any 'rebels' or 'traitors.' The Confederate soldiers have outlived his day in South Carolina. It was a dream."

A limited vestibule live stock train is the latest idea in live stock transportation. A company with a large capital has been organized to build and operate the line after the same manner which the Pullman company operates over roads. The first distinctive feature is that they are made wholly of iron and steel. The only wood in them is a few narrow strips on the sides. The roof is arched like a passenger coach, and under the arched roof, running the whole length of the train of the thirty cars, is a hayrack carrying enough for the ninety-hour trip from Montana to Philadelphia. Running through the center of the car and suspended from the roof is a passage through which a man can go from one end of the train to the other while it is under full speed. By that means a hay rack in front of the cattle can be kept full all the time and the cattle carefully watched without the necessity of any halt. In front of each animal is a steel watering trough.—Ex.

Talk about foolish suggestions for legislation, the Phoenix Republican has started one with about as small a degree of sense in it as anything we have seen. It is to make taxes payable semi-annually. The object is so, that it will be lighter on the taxpayers. The question is not a new one by any means. It has already been tried in a good many states, but we do not know now of a single one that has tried it that has not abolished it. The entire uselessness of such law in Arizona is apparent from the fact that the tax rolls are annually turned over to the various county treasurers about August, when the taxes are due and payable. Any one who desires to pay his taxes semi-annually, or in two payments, instead of paying them all at once, can have the pleasure of doing so without any legislation on the subject. As soon as the county treasurer receives the tax roll of his county, he is prepared to receive taxes, and it is not an unusual thing for parties to make payments on account, so that there is no necessity of burdening the statute books of the territory with a law to this effect.
